ABSTRACT

Because neither information system--MEDLARS and ERIC--serves practitioners of continuing education for health manpower satisfactorily, a basic list of terms was compiled from the literature and oral usage of the field and then compared with the MEDLARS and ERIC thesauri. The Project Master list contains 1,577 terms of which 71 percent are in the ERIC thesaurus and 23 percent are in MeSH. The list of newsletters, journals, and periodicals consulted is included. (MS)

STATEMENT

This publication is one of four parts of the Project Continuing Education for Health Manpower performed by Syracuse University pursuant to Contract No. HSM 110-71-147 with the Public Health Service, Department of Health, Education, and Welfare. The four parts are Fostering the Growing Need to Learn: Designs for the Continuing Education of Health Manpower; A Selective Annotated Bibliography for Continuing Educators of Health Manpower; A Report of Some Significant Activities in Continuing Education for Health Manpower in the United States; and A Critique of Descriptors of Terms in Continuing Education for Health Manpower. We take responsibility for these products, with full acknowledgement of the contributions of many persons to whatever usefulness the results may have to continuing educators in the health manpower field.

The Project staff acknowledges, first, the contributions of Dr. Marian E. Leach, Head, Education Science Section, Continuing Education and Training Branch, RMPS. She and the Project Director had many hours of discussion of the needs of the field of continuing education for health manpower before an enterprise to try to meet some of them took shape. During these discussions it was decided that at various stages of the study, the Project staff and the RMPS staff and advisors they would appoint would meet face-to-face to review not only the substance but also the next steps. In the Foreword to this volume, Dr. Edward Hinman remarks that the contract was unique in that it "incorporated provision for process as well as product." In that process, Dr. Leach participated as Project Officer and she also contributed as a highly professional and widely experienced continuing educator to every product at every stage.

In her Preface Dr. Leach acknowledges the contributions of the Ad Hoc Group that advised the RMPS on the monographs that make up Fostering the Growing Need to Learn. The Project staff acknowledges its grateful indebtedness also to the persons who advised Syracuse University. At first we called the group an "advisory panel." There were three plenary sessions. But as the Project developed the help we sought and received became more flexible. There were many informal meetings with individual members and with others who were not at first formally on the "panel."

We acknowledge the special contributions to the entire project of the following persons:

Pauline Atherton, Professor, School of Library Science, Syracuse University

Robert D. Bergeron, Director of Education, The Connecticut Hospital Association

Cyril O. Houle, Professor, Adult Education, University of Chicago

Ernest McMahon, Dean Emeritus, University Extension, Rutgers University

Rolf Monge, Associate Professor, Psychology, Syracuse University

Margaret Sovie, Educational Director, Upstate Medical Center, State University of New York

Coolie Verner, Professor and Department Chairman, Adult Education, University of British Columbia.

At various times the staff and panel were assisted by the following persons:

Harlan Copeland, Associate Professor, Adult Education, Syracuse University

Doris Chertow, Editor of Publications in Continuing Education, Syracuse University

Stanley Grabowski, Director, ERIC Clearinghouse on Adult Education

Betty Jane Vaughn, Director, Library of Continuing Education, Syracuse University.

INTRODUCTION

The purpose of the Project was to make a critical study of continuing education activities in the field of health manpower in the United States in order (1) to describe a scientific basis and a conceptual framework for continuing education efforts, and (2) to document continuing education of health manpower in a systematic way that would help decision-makers avoid traditional pitfalls, encourage sound innovations, and replicate and advance successful efforts.

The Project was to result in a set of five instruments: (1) a model, or models, applicable to a wide range of practitioners representing various disciplines and responsibilities in the provision and delivery of health care; (2) a series of monographs commissioned from outstanding authorities that together would cover all key aspects of continuing education of health manpower; (3) an annotated bibliography for continuing educators of health manpower; (4) a report of some significant activities in continuing education of health manpower throughout the country; and (5) a thesaurus of descriptors of terms (a controlled vocabulary) for the storage and retrieval of the literature of continuing education of health manpower. These five instruments were conceived as a set--all of which would serve to generate the understanding necessary for a rational, articulated, programmed development of continuing education of health manpower.

(The five instruments became four, when the Model was combined with the series of monographs.)

The methods of the Project were (1) to search the literature of continuing education generally and continuing education of health manpower, specifically, especially by the Regional Medical Programs, using such resources as the National Library of Medicine (particularly its MEDLARS), the Educational Resources Information Centers (particularly the ERIC Clearinghouse on Adult Education), the Syracuse University Library of Continuing Education, and the Library of the Upstate Medical Center of the State University of New York; and (2) to consult with knowledgeable individuals in various institutions, disciplines and practices, by engaging in dialogues, making visits to sites of activities and attending meetings.

Before turning attention to the present Report, an account of each of the five instruments of the Project is in order.

What was referred to as "a model" is included as the first chapter in a volume of ten chapters, the other nine of which are what was referred to as "a series of monographs," under the title Fostering the Growing Need to Learn: Designs for the Continuing Education of Health Manpower.

A Selective Annotated Bibliography for Continuing Educators of Health Manpower in the United States is a companion volume to the one above.

A Report of Some Significant Activities in Continuing Education for Health Manpower in the United States has been submitted to the Regional Medical Programs Service.

The present document, A Critique of Descriptors of Terms in Continuing Education for Health Manpower, has been submitted to the Regional Medical Programs Service.

The change in title from "thesaurus" to "critique" is significant. The shift came with the realization that a thesaurus--even a good one, complete with hierarchies, scope notes, broader terms and all the rest--is merely an exercise in words unless there is an information system behind it.

Each of the information systems in the fields that continuing education for health manpower straddles--MEDLARS and ERIC--serves its clientele well precisely because it and its thesaurus were designed specifically for that clientele. Moreover, each is constantly under revision but by a highly strict internal procedure. The problem that neither information system alone, nor the two together, serve practitioners of continuing education for health manpower satisfactorily is not one to be solved by a third party constructing a thesaurus.

What, then, could the Project do? What contribution could it make?

The staff was informed that it might help clarify the confusion of terms that are used to refer to jobs, tasks and roles in the field of health manpower.

Indeed, that would have been a contribution. But clarification must come first through consensus by the practitioners and only then be reflected in thesauri--thesauri that are the working vocabulary of information systems.

Therefore it was decided that the most the Project could hope to do was to compile a basic list of terms from the literature and oral usage in the field of continuing education for health manpower, and then to compare this list of terms with the lists of terms in the then current (1971-72) thesauri of MEDLARS and ERIC.

These three lists follow. The Project Master list numbers 1,577 terms; of these, 1,129 (71 per cent) are in the ERIC thesaurus, and 342 (23 per cent) are in MeSH. But, though most of the terms are in ERIC, most of the literature is in MEDLARS.

These three lists are submitted to RMPS in the hope that they may be of some use to MEDLARS and ERIC.

For aid in this part of the Project, the staff acknowledges its indebtedness to Pauline Atherton, Professor, Library Science, Syracuse University; F. Wilfrid Lancaster, Professor, Library Science, University of Illinois; Norman P. Shumway, Head, MeSH Section, and his colleague, Mrs. Edith Calhoun, National Library of Medicine; Douglas S. Price, Deputy Director, ERIC Processing and Reference Facility; and Eugene Wall, President, Lex-Inc.

A list of the newsletters, journals and periodicals that the Project staff regularly consulted is appended.
